HONORS

Growing up in North Carolina, Farrah admired lawyers for the integral role they play in all aspects of society. It was this admiration, coupled with her desire to be involved in policy changes and developments, that led her to enroll in law school. She enjoys learning about her clients, their businesses, and the industries in which they operate, tailoring her legal representation to their unique needs. She has a particular interest in health care law, having served as a legal intern at the Centers for Disease Control, Duke University Health System, and IQVIA.

As an undergraduate at UNC-Chapel Hill, Farrah was inducted into the Pi Sigma Alpha Honor Society. While in law school at UNC, she was a member of Holderness Moot Court, served as a staff writer and Articles Editor on the North Carolina Journal of Law & Technology, and served as a client coordinator for the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program. Farrah was recognized for completing 110.5 hours of pro bono work during law school, a passion she looks forward to continuing as an attorney.

Farrah is fluent in Urdu and Hindi, and has familiarity with Spanish and Arabic.

When she is not advocating for her clients, Farrah enjoys going to the gym, spending time with friends and family, traveling, reading novels, dancing, trying new restaurants, and watching the latest trending shows on Netflix.
